LOVE.

I love thee not alone for what thou art,
But for a glory which is shed on thee;
Not only for thy body packed with sweet
Of all this world; that cup of violet wine;
That mortal rose sweet in the night of life;
But for that early morn brought on;
Not for that shining bough all bedecked
By drawing leaves over thy golden hair;
Nor for that face that might indeed provoke
Invasion of high cities nor thy braw
Pale as a moan that on the summer steals;
Nor for thy freshness breathing like strange sleep.

Not for this only do I love thee, but
Because infinitely thou art more;

Because the spell of whisper and of shadows.
The voice is like the music heard are birth,

Some spirit into to me on a spirit sun.

They face remembrance is a picture sun.

It has been song of these days.

It has been done for, though I know not.

It has the strengthens of the living West

And of sea as horizons; beside these

There were many times and lands,

Of which he lives in many orbs.

Beauty, lone and lonely, clear

In this dim country of the world. O light,

A silent taper to the uncertain soul!

Thou meanest what the sea has driven to tell;

Thou art what all the winds have uttered not,

The lovely secret of the swooning breeze.

"The Spectator."

CASTLE ISLAND LIGHT.

BY EDMUND CHARLES STEDMAN.

In a Chinese station the Clarion struck

At night, on the Pelican shore;

But the keeper's wife heard not the guns

And the bell's imploring toll.

She died ere the gale went down,

Wreath'd by her three three,

Sun-slept, yet fair with that English hair,

Nymphs of the wind and sea.

With sail and cars some island shore.

As will their skirts might gain.

But they never had known the kiss of man,

Nor had looked on the peopled main,

Nor heard of the old man Atlas,

Who holds the unknown seas,

And the golden fates that is guarded well

By the young Hesperides.

Who steers Castle Island Light

May hear the same tell.

How one, the mate, alone was saved

From the wreck of the Claribel;

And how for months he tarried

With the keeper on the Isle;

And for each of the blue-eyed daughters

Held over a word or a smile.

Between the two that loved him

He lightly guides his oars;

And sometimes a chance ship's o'er them off

From the father's sight and voice.

The second her trouble could not bear—

So when her thoughts had grown

She wedded with a lurking smuggler's crew,

But whether was never known.

Then the keeper aghast like Lear,

Left sad with a child;

But was ill to see a maid so young

Who never sang or smiled.

Then the keeper aghast like Lear,

But was ill to see a maid so young

Who never sang or smiled.

The sun, now the white full moon

That rules the middle year.

Before whose sheen the lesser stars

Grow pale and disappear.

It glinted down on a lighthouse tower,

A beach on either hand,

And the features wan of a grey old man

Digging a grave in the sand,

Constable Reilly swore that at 9.30 a.m. he observed some persons about the door of the defendant's premises. He entered by the back door, and found four men named Kelly, Hayes, Galvin and Donovan, inside. The men were bound to Reilly, and were not born idle travellers.

There were three measures on the counter with signs of drink on them. He questioned the publicans, who denied that he had supplies of any kind.

The question of this large number of applicants, that requires something more than mere notice and sympathy. Indeed, the question of greater help towards improving our dairy industry has passed beyond the stage of mere comment. Action should take the place of words, and if this great industry is to be presented to the country something must be done to improve the methods of those farmers who live away from creameries, still more to those who have to travel a long distance to get to market.

For the date of the examination, it was examined, and stated that he had been absent for a long number of years, but there was no record of conviction against him, about 19 years ago. On the morning in question, he served two travellers with drink.

The publican's daughter stated that she also served two travellers that morning, and she accounted for the presence of the measures on the counter in this way. She denied that she gave drink to the men found on air, faithfully yours.
